Spotlight: Women in STEM

Krystal Drysdale left Kansas to join the City of Phoenix in August 2016, starting as a Water & Wastewater Economic Analyst in Water Services. She has since earned her Ph.D. and is now Principal Economic Planner. The Water, Economics, Rates & Forecasting (WERF) team forecasts water use demands, climate variability, economic/demographic impacts, and water rate structure development.

Krystal wanted a career that was largely researched focused while directly serving the community. She feels the most important quality of being a leader is making sure people feel heard and have a sense of purpose.

“Creating an environment where everyone feels understood helps to build confidence to rise to our greatest potential.”
